1. Introduction

- 1.1 It is estimated that there are over 70,000 war memorials in England, commemorating those lost in various wars ranging from the English Civil War right up to wars fought in the 21st century. War memorials are an important part of England's heritage, with a memorial of some type being present in most towns and villages across the country.

What is a war memorial?

- 1.2 The Imperial War Museum (IWM) maintain a register of war memorials, called the UK National Inventory of War Memorials. The IWM defines a war memorial as:

“any tangible object which has been erected or dedicated to commemorate those killed as a result of war, conflict or peacekeeping; who served in war or conflict; or who died whilst engaged in military service.”

- 1.3 In addition, the IWM suggest that to be 'erected' or 'dedicated' as a memorial, there must be some form of clear statement that defines the commemorative purpose of the structure and reports its installation. This statement is often found inscribed on the memorial itself and the unveiling/dedication service is usually recorded in the media.

Types of war memorial

- 1.4 On the inside of buildings, the most common type of war memorial found in England are those placed inside of buildings, particularly churches, usually taking the form of a metal plaque, stone tablet or timber board. These are often displayed with associated rolls of honour, usually written on paper and framed.
- 1.5 Outside of buildings, the most common type of memorial is the free-standing memorial structure, such as crosses, columns, obelisks, cenotaphs and other sculpted figures.

Why survey outdoor war memorials?

- 1.6 Although of significance, memorials inside buildings are usually outside of Local Planning Authority control. The most common internal memorials, i.e. those in churches, are included within the exemption from Listed Building Consent enjoyed by ecclesiastical buildings. Further, many memorials are within unlisted buildings so again, are outside of planning control. Finally, internal memorials are usually protected from the effects of the weather, which is the main cause of damage to a memorial.
- 1.7 The most prominent war memorials are those outside of buildings. These are often in Local Authority ownership (including Parish Councils) and their presence contributes to the character of that area. All outdoor memorials receive some form of protection in the planning system in Bassetlaw, whether by being listed, by being within the curtilage of a listed building, by being within a Conservation Area, by being within a Registered Park & Garden or by being identified as 'non-designated heritage assets'<sup>1</sup>.

<sup>1</sup> Identified in line with the Council's adopted criteria on the identification of 'non-designated heritage assets', as adopted in January 2011 \(and updated in July 2012\),

1.8 This purpose of this document is:

a) To fully catalogue all the outdoor war memorials within Bassetlaw District

Prior to this survey and assessment, Bassetlaw District Council did not have a full and complete list of the District's outdoor war memorials and in many cases, knew little of the local historic significance of individual monuments. As part of the Conservation Team's role in maintaining and improving the council's evidence base (for planning purposes), the creation of this list was the first essential step in helping to preserve the District war memorials and to secure they are fully taken account of in planning decision-making.

b) To survey the condition of each memorial

Using the complete list, it is then important to survey the condition of each of the District's 38 outdoor war memorials. This will firstly help identify those memorials which require some form of remedial work and will also help the allocation of any grant funding (whether from internal or external sources) towards any necessary repairs.

c) To confirm the Council's support for the preservation, repair or sympathetic restoration of the District's war memorials

The Council will support the preservation, repair or sympathetic restoration of the District's war memorials as identified in this survey document. The Council will also, where possible, offer financial or research assistance to the owners of war memorials to assist in their preservation, repair or restoration and will provide advice on submitting grant applications to external sources<sup>2</sup>.

1.9 An earlier version of this survey, approved in May 2014, was also used to support listing applications for a large number of the memorials. Most of these listing applications have subsequently been successful and this is reflected in this November 2015 update. In addition, a further war memorial, at Bothamsall, was discovered after the initial survey was approved.

1.10 The following section contains the Conservation Team's survey and assessments of significance of the District's outdoor war memorials. This contains photographs, background information and survey results of each war memorial identified.
